Children in Foster Care

Sometimes state child welfare agencies place children in foster care with grandparents or other relatives. Most state agencies call these placements “kinship care.”

Numbers – June 2006

- There were 1,777 children in out-of-home placements under the supervision of the South Dakota Department of Social Services and in Tribal and private agency custody.
- Of these children, 240 are in unlicensed kinship placements and 99 children are placed in a licensed kinship home.

Preferences for kinship care

- South Dakota state procedures require that kin be considered first when an out-of-home placement is sought for an abused or neglected child, either “as temporary placement until the child(ren) can be returned to the home of the parent(s) or guardian(s)” or as “the permanent plan for the child(ren).”
- There is no separate licensing program for kinship foster parents.
- Kin must meet the same licensing standards and training requirements and receive the same foster care payment rate as non-kin foster parents.
- In some cases, kinship foster parents are eligible for one-time funds to purchase beds, dressers, and other items that they need in order to care for the children.

Subsidized guardianship programs

- South Dakota has a subsidized guardianship program that provides a subsidy to eligible children who are at least twelve years of age and children who have been in foster care for at least six months.
- The subsidy amount is based on the needs of the child, not to exceed the current foster care rate for the child.
- The state must document that the child cannot return home and that adoption is not possible or in the child’s best interest.
- Medical coverage is not provided.
